RESEARCH

My area of research expertise is in constitutional law, a key tool in society to respond to legal, political and social challenges. I am one of the leading constitutional law scholars in the country, and the leading Australian scholar on questions of belonging and identity under the Constitution. My research addresses how the law configures membership, on what basis are people included or excluded and how that law relates to the social realities of the Australian community. In brief, I research the constitutional law of belonging and identity.
